The high expression levels and broad specificity of various immunoglobulin subclasses has made them potential candidates as cancer therapeutics. The IgA subtype has distinct properties relative to other immunoglobulin isotypes, one of which is its capacity to efficiently interact with polyanions such as heparin (Froelich et al., 1973; WO 91/12874). The polyanionic glycosaminoglycan heparin has been investigated as a cancer treatment in early studies since its discovery in anticoagulant activity in 1948 (Furlan et al., 1997). Heparin has been shown to have anti-tumor activity in a wide range of experimental systems including fibrosarcoma and mammary carcinoma (Zervas et al., 1992; Wiesmann, et al., 1995), thymoma and neuroblastoma (Moeller et al., 1993), and carcinogen-induced mouse lymphomas (Pitcher-Nelson et al., 1988). Polyanionic glycosaminoglycans are an emerging class of anti-cancer agents. The key to the activity of these agents resides in the non-covalent binding of the polyanion to the particular monoclonal antibody used for cancer therapy. These binders can be effective by virtue of being able to exploit the polyanion binding sites of the

It's no secret that the use of technology in the modern world has enabled businesses to be more efficient and in some cases, more profitable. One of the greatest factors of technological advancement is that it has allowed businesses to be able to quickly and efficiently reach clients in the most convenient manner possible. However, with all of these advantages comes a new problem known as cybercrime. Cybercrime is a growing issue, and it is starting to impact all aspects of life and business. Cybercrime and How it Affects Business Consider this:

- Cybercrime costs some company owners millions of dollars annually.
- The FBI has traced online child pornography back to 25,000 computers in fewer than 2 months.
- The widespread availability of child pornography online has given rise to the Internet child pornography underground economy.
- The average dollar amount of damage caused by cybercrime to businesses is $13,500.
- Cybercrime is the fastest growing type of crime in the world.
- The ability to view, upload and download child pornography has made it easier to commit other crimes on the Internet.

How Can Managed Print Services Cut Costs? Every organization understands the importance of IT security and keeping their data safe. One of the easiest ways to do this is to allow them to access their document management software via a secure connection. Of course, not all organizations have the budget or resources to let their employees access their systems from home. This could mean that they are forced to print documents in an office-wide printer even though they could be printed from their mobile device. Many people are unaware of how much this can cost them. The report is clear that the biggest cost factor in the UK's £125.4 billion IT services is printing and that the average UK company costs them £55,000 per year. This means that £126 million dollars are being spent on printing every year in the UK. How Can Managed Print Services Cut Costs? Most small businesses don't have the same need for using the Internet as large businesses. Small businesses are typically able to keep their IT costs low by using what they need for its operation. These costs include:

- Print
- Phone calls
- Utilities
